Polaroid

IM1836

Цифровой фотоаппарат на базе ANDROID
Матрица: 18МПикс
Экран: 3.5" TOUCH SCREEN
Объектив: 10-30мм
Подъемная вспышка
Wi-Fi
Литиевый аккумулятор

Особенность цифрового аппарата заключается в том, что он функционирует под управлением операционной системы Android, что существенно расширяет функционал фотоаппарата: пользователи смогут запускать браузер и игры, работать с электронной почтой (Wi-Fi), музыкальным альбомом, календарём и пр.

Предусмотрены возможность сортировки фотоснимков по различным параметрам и редактировать изображения.

Цифровой фотоаппарат оборудован 18-мегапиксельной ПЗС-матрицей, объективом с 3-кратным оптическим трансформатором и сенсорным дисплеем с диагональю 3,5 дюйма. Для хранения данных применяются сменные карты формата microSD вместимостью до 32 Гб.

Rumors are gathering pace that Polaroid is about to launch a mirrorless interchangeable-lens camera powered by Android. Recent months have seen both Nikon and Samsung release Android point-and-shoots, and Polaroid itself was touting its own Android wares at CES all the way back in January. Today's rumor, however, is of a very different product. Looking eerily like a Nikon 1 J series camera, the Polaroid IM1836 will pair an 18.1-megapixel sensor with an as-yet-unspecified interchangeable-lens system. It'll also have a 3.5-inch touchscreen, Android 4.0, a pop-up flash, Wi-Fi connectivity, and an HDMI-out port.

The fact that the recently-released Nikon 1 J2 and IM1836 look so alike has led some to speculate that it's a repackaged and repurposed version of Nikon's interchangeable-lens system camera, and will accept the same lenses. Of course, these are just rumors, though; most of the specs are attached to the above picture, which was featured in industry magazine Dealerscope in a corporate profile on consumer electronics company Sakar. The fact that these images seem to have accidentally leaked through a trade publication rather than an unknown blog does lend a modicum of weight to what would otherwise be a thoroughly shaky rumor. Either way, with CES just around the corner, we expect to hear some more about the Polaroid IM1836 soon.
